Big Mistake: Hiding Value of Benefits from Employees

When it comes to keeping good employees satisfied, management often fails to use one of its most important assets: the value of employer-provided benefits. A recent survey of employees and HR professionals finds that employees value benefits highly, while HR professionals seem to downplay what employees value most. Click "Full Article" to learn how you and your management team can add value to your benefit offerings.

Taxes: What Congress STILL Hasn't Resolved

With the end of the year approaching, many folks are thinking about ways to cut their taxes for 2010 as well as in 2011. But tax planning is difficult this year because so many tax provisions are scheduled to expire on December 31 -- or they expired at the end of 2009 and were not reinstated the way many people expected. Congress will not take up the unresolved issues until after the November elections, at the earliest. Here is a list of tax provisions that are still up in the air.
